Mrs May struts the Brussels stage in her naivety, she really thinks she has succeeded in pulling off a coup in the latest fiasco with the EU.

The EU can't believe their luck, of all the ability in the UK we have to represent us, the most inane has been chosen.

It is sheer and utter madness that our once great country has been sold down the river by this pathetic, lack lustre, middle manager who hasn't a clue. She treats us with disdain, along with her cohorts Rudd and Hammond, but more importantly, she misjudges the mood of the country.

The simmering anger displayed in the Brexit correspondence today, as it has almost daily for months now, will at one point erupt and Parliament, the Lords and Londonistan will all come falling down.

In her naivety she thinks she can pull off this coup and be hailed by her paymasters in Brussels, she is wrong. The Brits are made of sterner resolve than her wobbly kitten heels.
