The major problem with the world's micro managers manifests itself in the old (forgotten?) British idiom about 'not seeing the wood for the trees', as well as my American favourite “When you are up to your ass in alligators, it's difficult to remember your original intention was to drain the swamp”.

Our PM is a Micro Manager. We hear her making statements on behalf of her Ministers; we see her on TV and in the papers performing tasks better suited to her junior Ministers. When it comes to listening to the people around her, across the other side of the House, and most importantly for our democracy, the people who vote, she seems to have the selective hearing of a child being told it's time for bed! A Leader cannot do everything in planning, implementation and operations. The ability (and will) to listen, delegate and make decisions is the most important characteristics of a Leader however great or insignificant. If a Leader cannot trust the supporters employed to do their jobs, they should not have been appointed in the first place.

Those who work in her government, especially the Civil Service, her fellow Remainer elected officials and the unelected upper Chamber, have lost all sense of responsibility and accountability and demonstrate the morals of alley cats.

Life is simple. It takes a politician to complicate a problem; it takes a complete idiot to ignore it.

Problems never just go away.

In the last week I have watched one elected official face up to what could be a major problem on more than one occasion: he is a well-known lone voice with a different opinion and set of standards to the mainstream politician, but reminds us of what made Britain Great.

Jacob Rees-Mogg. A man demonstrating 'old fashioned' values: TRUTH, HONESTY, FAITH, REASON, PRINCIPLES, INTEGRITY, TRUST.

Seven values which remain forgotten and unused by those who would lead our nation, or report on the state of our Country and the world via our media.

In the last week, JRM has been very openly and personally attacked for his integrity and principles; principles applied to his personal, family, political and business life.

Very public accusations by representatives of the State Owned Media, the BBC, have questioned his views on right to life and abortion, and (in his business life) foreign investment. He has responded in his usual fashion, calm, with a debate based on the true facts. His inquisitors, Jo Coburn on Daily Politics, and Andrew Marr (in his own programme) displayed all that is worst in political commentators: ignorance, lack of preparation and a level of (polite) bigotry and prejudice unbecoming servants paid from the public purse.

What Britain needs right now are more Rees-Moggs who seek to rebuild our Country, and fewer Andrew Marrs and Jo Coburns who are apparently trying to stop them!

The People chose to leave the European Union; he who gave us the choice abrogated his elected responsibility as a Leader and thereby broke his word and his promise to those People. Unfortunately the person chosen to replace him was not the choice of the People. It was the choice of his fellow travellers many of whom disagreed with the Referendum result. When the choice was offered for ratification by the People, it was very clear that it was not a popular choice.

'Horses for Courses' is a British proverb that describes our Country's predicament well: We have a Leader without the essential qualities for the job, and who has yet to display any Leadership qualities that fit the Will of the British People expressed in the Referendum nor has she demonstrated the negotiating and problem solving skills necessary for the job.

The latest political act under our Leader reveals a dangerous new direction: her acceptance of the European Arrest Warrant (when Home Secretary) led to the loss of Habeas Corpus. The use of a 'Breach of the Peace' to detain (and it would appear imprison) a well-known individual for his views and actions indicates the existential threat to Freedom of Speech and Freedom of Movement in our once free society. The political control of our Police is now seen to be absolute. Their actions last Friday now raise the questions about "Who will police our Police?"

One commentator remarked recently that it is taking longer to 'Leave the EU' than it took to win World War 2. That hard won fight for Freedom from tyranny is being replaced by something far more sinister and dangerous, without a shot being fired.
