

robert henderson <anywhere156@yahoo.co.uk>

Sadly, Alison Chabloz was convicted on all charges today (25 May). The charges all related directly or indirectly to songs she had performed which were deemed to have been grossly offensive.

She has yet to be sentenced because the judge John Zani has called for a probation report. Alison will meet with the probation officer on 31 May and sentencing will be on 14 June at 10.00 at Marylebone Magistrates Court Zani did not read out his judgement in its entirety but I did get the chance to read his full judgement.

The full Judgment

Para 112 - near the end of this written judgement – ran

"Put shortly, this court is satisfied that the material in each of the songs is grossly offensive as judged by an open and multiracial society -as opposed to, for example, merely offensive. "

That says it all. There is one view and one view only permissible, the internationalist politically correct view.

The whole trial was a literal nonsense because the law distinguishes between offensive (legal) and grossly offensive (illegal).

In the nature of things the distinction cannot be meaningfully made because there is no means of (1) quantifying offensiveness and (2) different people, even from the same social background and racial or ethnic group, will react very differently to the same thing.

In a truly free society, the offensive/grossly offensive dichotomy would become irrelevant because no one would have the right not to be offended.

[There was a very strong turnout of supporters of Alison and the media were much more in evidence than they were for Jez Turner's trial I will write more about this case and Jez Turner's over the weekend. Jez has managed to get an email out of the prison to Richard Edmonds. In it he says he is not having any problems.]

After the convictions of Jez and Alison it is clear that everyone who does not play the politically correct game is in danger of finding themselves in the dock. In fact there is every reason to believe our politically correct powers-that-be will be emboldened to go further.

In fact there is every reason to believe our politically correct powers-that-be will be emboldened to go in for the kill and rapidly tighten the censorship noose around anything deemed politically incorrect. The CPS will be much more reluctant to rule that accusations of racism should not be prosecuted. In addition, the Sentencing Council (part of the Ministry of Justice) is conducting a consultation exercise which may well result in much harsher penalties for "hate crimes" - see <https://www.independent.co.uk/news/uk/home-news/hate-crime-sentences-increased-harsher-influence-social-media-followers-a8341991.html>

Want your politics with the cant taken out? Then try Robert Henderson blogs:

<http://www.livinginamadhouse.wordpress.com/>
<http://www.englandcalling.wordpress.com/>
<http://www.ukcmri.wordpress.com/>

Twitter RH156 and Facebook