

Freedom 's loss and the onward destructive march of Government Repression is satirised by The Rev Peter Mullen in this splendid piece. This unstable Government is so worried about any stability that it is imposing instability and destroying established UK traditions and Christian cultures and customs wherever it can achieve that end. Dead or Alive: The new Equalities Measure

If you think the BBC is more than a bit queer, you're right: first item on the news for 1st July 2018 was the announcement that there are 417 transsexuals on its staff. Characteristically, a BBC spokesperson commented, "We are proud of the fact that the Corporation contains so much diversity." Wonderful news! Everybody is welcome at the BBC – except Tories.

Transgendering, transexualism and all the other varieties of sexual-social engineering are being deliberately employed to abolish the traditional societal categories wherein a man was a man, a woman was a woman, a man might be a husband and a woman might be a wife. Now men marry men and they may, by contrivance and contraption, beget children. All this is deliberate state policy. Why? Because a traditional society, with its well-marked identity roles for its people, is a stable society.

Modern governments don't want a stable society. Their rallying cry is Change. For a constantly changing society is infinitely malleable. In The Book of Common Prayer's Communion Service it says, "Cursed is he that removeth his neighbour's landmark." With its gender diversity obsession, the secular – ie atheistic - state has removed all the landmarks which told us who we were and where we were. So called "Equal Marriage" was only the start of a thoroughgoing social revolution. Any bizarre thing might happen next. I had a dream...

Following the glorious success of his Homosexual Marriage Act, former Prime Minister Dave Camembert has suggested that the government should introduce a Bill to provide us all with the right to a funeral "– whether we're dead or not." Just as a wedding should not be denied to a homosexual, so a funeral should not be available only to the dead. Mr Camembert told my researcher: "A funeral is such a wonderful institution that I want to see its benefits extended to everyone. It's really very socially-excluding to provide this basic human right for dead people alone. Of course, we in the Conservative party have a great deal of respect for the dead, but we can no longer in all conscience tolerate a system which forces so many people to have to wait for seventy, eighty or even ninety years before being afforded the ordinary human privilege of a decent burial.”

Camembert – “Cheesy” to his friends – was speaking to a great gathering of nurses and NHS junkies led by Ms Euthanasia Daley. There was a PASSING PRIDE banner stretched right across Downing Street while gaily printed T-shirts joyously proclaimed BURY THE LIVING. To the accompaniment of an enthusiastic steel band, a visiting cohort of Millwall FC supporters sang a chorus or two of the especially composed anthem SO SHUFFLE OFF YOUR FUCKING MORTAL COIL THEN.

It is understood that funerals will not be restricted to burials but may include, as well as cremations, being ritually shot into space or even mummified and walled up in special thanatos chambers in the basements of one or other of our great national institutions such as Broadcasting House. Unofficially, many have already been interred in there for years. There will be statutory arrangements for lads and ladettes hell-bent on an early funeral to hold the ceremony in their favourite nightclub or on motorbikes. More adventurous types have elected to hold their service in hot air balloons and some reactionary, anti-EU Tories – the so called bastards – are known to have applied to the Carlton Club, where a funeral is presently called “dinner.”

There has been a general welcome for the new measure, though Leader of the Opposition, Sarcophagus Corfin, issued a statement this morning saying that funerals in posh places such as The Ritz or on yachts belonging to Russian gangsters “will not help the promotion of social mobility.” (Insiders see in this comment a sly dig at Mr George Omnivorous and Lord Mandelpratt who are known to have many Russian friends) The Mayor of London, Mr Sadlad Khan’t deplored Mr Corfin’s failure to mention the huge potential for increasing the popularity of “living deaths by Muslims.” While Boris Bullingdon expostulated: “Crikey! Chaps should be allowed to have their snuff party wherever they fancy. Mine’s to be at Chequers – when I’m PM of course.”

Mr Flatpack Oilwelby, Archcommunity Songster of Canterbury, said, “The new Funerals Measure is very good news in a very real sense and we in the Church of England (deceased) give it our blessing. Goodness me – the stuffy old C. of E. has quite a lot of catching up to do with society’s modernising project! I’m sure the compilers of the Good Book had Canterbury in mind when they wrote, ‘The See shall give up its dead’?”

Flatpack insisted that people will not be restricted to the “irrelevant archaic language” of The Book of Common Prayer - rubbish such as ashes to ashes, dust to dust... I’ve asked the Synod to produce a Supplement to Common

Worship which will include the words; I give you this grave as a sign of your funeral...”
